NEWFOUNDLAND BILL. Mr Jenkinfon moved for the House to go into a Committee on the Newfoundland bill.

A conversation immediately took place after Sir George Yonge had taken the Chair, concerning the islands of Jersey and Guernsey, in which Lord Beauchamp, Mr. Holdsworth, Mr Jenkinson, Mr Brickdale, Mr Le Mesurier, Mr Dempster, and Sir George Howard took a part, and the bill passed the

QUEBEC BILL. Mr Powys rofe, he faid, to state a business to the House, which, in his opinion, was of very material importance. He owned himself very inadequate to a subject which had occupied the attention and abilities of one of the most worthy and respectable Commoners that ever had a feat in this House, and whose death was an object of serious and deep affliction to every fincere well-wither to the prosperity of the British constitution; and, when he mentioned the name of the late Sir George Savile, the House would bear testimony to the truth of what he had faid. That great and good man had not a wish nearer his heart than the emancipation of his fellow fubjects from every circumstance of flavery in whatever corner of the world, or by whatever misfor-tunes they were thus fituated. It was his intention, though at an humble distance, to demonstrate his general regard to the first privileges of our nature, by expressing a fincere defire that his Majesty's subjects in the Province of Canada might participate of those laws under which we lived. For this purpose they had petitioned Parliament. That petition had now been on the table near two years. He could not tell why no notice whatever had been taken of it by those who were at the head of his Majesty's Councils. It was to obtain an answer to the prayer of those unfortunate persons who had applied to this House thus constitutionally, that he now prefumed to draw an attention to the fubiect. He flated the form of Government enjoyed by the Canadians from the year 1763 to 1774, and shewed how much preferable it was before than fince the laft of these periods. His animadversions on the spirit of the act of 1774 were pointed, and demonstrable, as he observed, from the facts which weter on record. The objects to which the petition was confined were an optional jury in civil cases; the independence of the Judges; that the members of the Legislative Council should not be removeable at the will of the Governor, and feveral other regulations. connected with these great and leading points. He argued on each of these heads separately, and at fome length; and took notice of an objection telating to the time of the proposition, which he cwaed was in his view altogether without weight. He knew that a very able officer was appointed Captain General of that important place. He was at the fame time aware, that even Sir Guy Carleton could not be expected to advise any thing like a restraint on the powers with which he was himfelf to be fa-trufted. But furely there could be no real impropriety in even fending out relief by that Gentleman, whole abilities and virtues he regarded as highly as any man could do. He condemned the act of and urged the generolity of the Houfe to rouse and refeue their fellow-creatures from a condition fo httle honourable to the government and fensibility of this country. He called upon Ministers to recollect, that even in plenitude of power they were but men: and it was then most meritorious to shew their sympathy when they had the greatest temptations to forget, or overlook their alliance to the species. He then concluded by moving for leave to bring in a bill for amending, explaining, and altering what was generally called the Quebec Act.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer faid that no man was more anxious to extend the liberties of the constitution than he was. There were circumstances, however, which required great and ferious confideration, in the propolition now brought forward by the Hon. Gentleman, with fo much credit to his principles and his feelings. It ought to be recollected, that Sir Guy Carleton was appointed, and that much would depend on his report of what thate that proviace was now in, and what the dispos-sition of the inhabitants in general was. He laid it down as a principle, that any mode of government which could be adopted for Canada, ought to regard as the first and principal object how the people at large were inclined. How was this fundamental and material fact to be afcertained ? An officer was to collect evidence on the fpot, who was competent to decide on the temper most predominant, and to whose authenticity there could be no exception. For these reasons he did not think this the most proper time for bringing forward such a measure, at the fame time that he acknowledged it was a measure which did great honour to the principles of the Hon.

an act of despotism, and pronounced a panegyr, on the noble Lord in the Blue Ribband, who was then at the head of administration. That noble Lorde he faid, was feriously disposed to extend our free constitution to every part of his Majesty's deminions, as far as the enjoyment of these appeared compatible with their attachment and subjection to the British Government.

Mr Fox supported the idea of his Hon. friend (Mr Powys) that the ast of 1774 was an act of complete despotism; and the question was not what that act was, but whether it was then politic or expedi-This he never could bring himfelf to believe or conceive; and being of that opinion eleven years ago, when the Canadians had been in expectation of tharing our privileges for eleven years before, it was not likely he should adopt another now. In truth, he was more than ever of ominion, that now was the most proper time imaginable for the introduction of fuch a measure. If we had ever so many Colonies, he thought all of them as much entitled to liberty as we are. It was now three and twenty years fince they were promifed this gracious privilege, and ftill Ministry demurred. He reminded the House, that by the act of 1778, the powers of taxation in the legislative council ceased. It was therefore worth the attention of Gentlemen to onquire, whether, in case the expenditure of that country should exceed the revenue, they could with a free confcience vote away the properties of their constituents to make up the deficiency.

Sir Joseph Manubey answered Sir Grey Cooper and Mr Fox, and attacked Lord North.

Mr Courtney stated, that the act of 1774 originated in the advicetof Sir Guy Carlton, and that by the appointment of an officer, who by that act had handed himself so very unpopular, the people of Canada would conceive that their liberties were never to be reftored. He neither praifed nor blamed Sirl God Carleton, but had fometimes observed, that his Majesty's appointments affected the fortunate perfonages who received them, as the Great Sent did quack medicines; its magical influence imparted the greatest and most exalted qualities which had not been known or heard of before. He flated the case of the Chief justice Livius. That gentleman had moved in Council, that the instructions sent out to meliotate the feverity of the act should be published for the public benefit. Sir Guy Carleton had that gentleman immediately removed; nor was there' ever any other reason advanced for this measure. He did not state the fact invidiously. He would make no application; but the fact was precifely fuch as he had flated.

Mr Alderman Watfon entered into a long elabor rate encomium on Sir Guy Carleton, and faid, that the act of 1974 had preferred the province of Quebec. He denied the fact concerning the

Mr Marsham was on his legs, stating his opinion, when he found himself interrupted by the Gentlemen on the Treasury Bench He specified this indecency as extremely improper, and unworthy the gravity and signity of the House. It was a practice, he observed, extremely common, and he thought it an insult in his Majerty's Ministers to be accessary to a conductifinarry, disreputable to Gantleton, who, though unequal in point of attitives

Mr Marsham only complained that he had been deranged in what he meant to have faid, as his ho-nourable friend Mr Powys had certainly been but a little before.

Mr Powys faid, without attributing any improper motives to the Hon. Gentleman who occasioned the levity complained of, he certainly felt the effect. He then went over leveral objections which had been stated in the course of the debate.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer made feveral remarks on the different things which he thought concerned himself during this long conversation.

The gallery being then ordered to be cleared, and the question put on Mr Powys's motion, the numbers were, Ayes

Noes. Mr Burke was speaking on our return to the gallery, and we only heard him observe, that though he had been obliged, in obedience to the authority of the House; to submit to their decision, in order ing a copy of his charges to be delivered to Warren Haffings, Efq: in their imperfect ftate, he should think it incumbent on him to go on with what re-mained, as if no fuch order had existed.

Some convertation then took place respecting the fecond reading of the bill concerning fome new regulations in county elections. This was then fixed for next Friday at three o'clock. Adjourned.

The Right Hon. Mr Dundas faid, he was clear ther that the whole of the bill that related to the for should be dropt, or that the members of the callege of Justice should be included. He had had tecasion in another place to examine what they bounded on, and formed his opinion that they were or excemed from affeffments to the poor; but he ould not approve of this indirect way of attacking him, unless the members were all clear that the him was ill-founded. He added, the poor would blow the rich; but if the rich refused to maintain them, the burden would be too great for the other habitants; and the gentlemen of the three Lo-mans would be oppressed with all the forners thro' he kingdom.

Mr Anstruther spoke next. He was of opinion hat the College had an exemption, and stated with teat precision the grounds of that opinion. He lo observed, that the bill seemed to be intended, for the ease of the inhabitants of Edinburgh, but the gentlemen in the neighbourhood.

The Lord Advacate then delivered his opinion, that the College had no fuch privilege; and went into a long discussion of all the acts of Parliament relating to the privileges, and to the maintenance of the poor. He was interrupted by the members of the Committee being called to attend the House; and the further confideration was adjourned till

The following Petition, from the Heritors of the Eight Southern Districts, is now under the consideration of the Hon. House of Commons.

THAT the faid Eight Districts are fixuated without the liberties of the City of Edinburgh, enjoy no benefit or privilege within the fame, derive protection or accommodation from the police establishments thereof, and are to all intents and purpoles as much unconnected with the faid city, excepting the fingle circumstance of vicinity, as any other part of the county of Edinburgh.

Accordingly, the faid Eight Districts have on no occasion whatever been subjected to any burden imposed upon the City of Edinburgh, whether for the support of its internal government and police, or for defraying the expence of public works within the

In the 25th year of the reign of his present Majefty, the Magistrates and Town Council of Edinburgh obtained an act of Parliament for building a Bridge over the Cowgate, and imposing certain af-feffments for defraying the expence of the same. In consideration of this communication, which was an object of considerable benefit to the inhabitants of the Eight Diffricts, and in confequence of the Magiftrates having further promifed to supply the faid Eight Districts with water, to make a communication from the east to the west parts thereof, and to execute certain other improvements within the fame, all of which they were by the faid act to be empowered to do; the petitioners agreed to be fubjected to a certain proportion of the land-nax payable by the proprietors within the city, and also to be made liable along with the faid inhabitants, in case the Trustees aread by the faid inhabitants, in case the Trustees named by the said act should not have funds sufficient for completing the Bridge, to make good the faid deficiency, not exceeding ten par cent. of one year's valued rent of their respective proper-ties. But so sensible were the Magistrates and Council, that the fole ground upon which any affeffment could be imposed on the ment could be imposed on the petitioners for the im-provement of the city, was their own free and voprovement of the city, was their own free and vo-instary confent, that the act not only proceeds on the narrative that the petitioners had confented to the afferment, but also specially provides, "That "the payment of a proportion of the land-tax im-"posed, or to be imposed, on the City of Edinburgh and its liberties, by the owners and proprietors of the Eight Diffricts to the south of the City of Edinburgh, shall navae infer as he conferred in the Edinburgh. shall never infer or be construed into any pretext for subjecting them in any further burdens, nor for extending the royalty of the city over thefe diftries, or any of them.

Notwithstanding the above special provision, and the exception from all city taxes, which, independent thereof, the petitioners from their local fituation of right enjoy, the Magistrates and Town Council of Edinburgh did lately, without any previous Honourable House, and obtain leave to bring in Bill, which has accordingly been brought in, and is now depending; and upon the narrative, That in order to enable the Lord Provoft, Magistrates, and Council to widen the High Street, and take away the Luckenbooths, Prilon, and Weigh-house, it will be proper to give them a prospect of a fund for that purpose, prays that it may be enacted, " That the Trustees named for making the said Bridge " over the Cowgate, and communication from the " High Street to the South, in whatever fituation their funds may be, and whether there may be a deficiency or not, shall have full power, and they are hereby authorifed to demand, levy, and col-" lect from every proprietor of the City of Edin-burgh, South and North Leith, Canongate, and " Pleafance, of the Eight Diftricts on the South " fide of the city, a fun of money not exceeding " per cent. of one year's valued rent, as the fame shall be ascertained, for payment of the " Land-tax, in the fame way and manner as they "are entitled to demand and levy the fame; in the event of their funds being deficient, to the amount of the faid per cent. any thing in the before recited act, in the 25th year of the reign of his prefent Majesty, notwithstanding."

That the petitioners apprehend, that this attempt to subject them in payment of this affestiment, with-out their consent, is not only directly inconsistent with the folern compact, in confequence of which they conferred to the affeffment imposed by the faid 25th act of his present Majesty, and to the special proviso therein contained, and above recited, but is highly unjust in itself, and tending to establish a precedent dangerous to the interests of the petitioners, by subjecting them, on a variety of similar pretexts, to the burdens imposed on the citizens of Edinburgh, for purpoles in which the petitioners have no interest or concern.—And they feel the injustice of the ahove clause the more especially, that it is the object thereof to apply the furns to be levied from them, on a work from which they can derive neither advantage nor accommodation, while they have no fecurity that the improvements authorifed by the former act to be made within the bounds of the Eight Districts will be carried into execution, nor even that the re-moval of the Luckenbooths and Weigh-house, the alledged object of this heavy affeitment, will ever take place, there being no chauses in the Bill obliging the Magistrates and Council to lay out the tax per cent. on thefe improvements.

Your petitioners do therefore humbly pray this Honourable House, that the said Bill, so far as it empowers the Trustees to levy any part of the faid 10 per cent. from the proprietors of the Eight Southern Districts, and thereby impose a burden upon them, to which in justice they cannot be subfected without their confent, and from which they are specially excemed by the foresaid act of the 25th of his present Majesty, may not pass into a law; or at least, that the Honourable House will allow the

To the Printer of the Caledonian Mercury.

THE spirit of freedom now begins to rouse up an opposition to the designs of the Magi-strates of Edinburgh, which the high ideas they entertained of their own importance prevented them from expecting.

It is with pleasure I observe the inhabitants of the South Districts setting the laudable example to others; to ftem the torrent of oppression. - The refolutions of these Districts published in the newspapers, are founded on the indifputable principles of justice, are drawn up in a clear and perspicuous manner, and in good language, while the answer to them published by the Committee of the Town Council exhibits the very contrary. - There is there discernible studied ambiguity, manifest evasion, and paulity arguments cloathed in an ungraceful drefs.

The inhabitants of the Southern Districts have hitherto preferved themselves perfectly free and unconnected with the Royalty of Edinburgh and its Magistrates, and they will do well to perfevere in doing so, at least till the Corporations of Scotland shall be better regulated than at present they are. As a lure to them, to consent to bear dertain burdens payable to the Town, and to confent to pay an afferment for the purpose of building a South Bridge, were held forth to them the prospect of an easy and beautiful communication between the centre of the city and their property, with a promife of water on the fame terms as those on which the inhabitants of the New Town are supplied with it.

There are very material advantages which behoved confiderably to encrease the value of property on that fide of the Town, and render the inhabitants of much more convenient. - The Diffricts therefore did well in agreeing to the terms held out to them; but they acted with equal propriety in anxiously guarding against their confent to that Bill being drawn into a precedent to tax or burden them in futute for the benefit of the Town of Edinburgh. The conduct of the Magistrates, however, in bringing in a new Bill, containing a claufe that will appropriate part of the funds levied from the Districts, under the presence of building the South Bridge, and confented to in confideration of the above advantages, to a purpose with which the South Di-stricts are totally unconnected, and which, though perhaps it may add to the beauty of the High Street, can never benefit them, ought to let them fee, that no faving clause in an act of Parliament is of itself a perioners to be heard by themsel ea, or by their functioners to be heard by themsel ea, or by their counter, against the said Bill.—And your petitioners that ever pray, dec.

The above petition was figured by, Counters Downger of Aberdeen, Teviot-row.

In order to fecure themfelves from farther attempts to encroach upon their rights, they ought to have opposed the application of any part of the to per cent. to any purpose except what was provided in the forto any purpose except what was provided in the for-mer act; and by such opposition, which could not fail of being essential, they would have prevented any similar attempt in time coming; but if the ro-per cent. shall be levied from them, and applied to the purpose of the present Bill, however anxiously the Districts may guard, by a faving clause, against a similar attempt, yet such attempt will be made the first opportunity that offers, and the Districts will then find it necessary to set up the opposition they ought now to exert.

The Town Council in their answer anxiously avoid avowing their real intentions, and decline informing the Diffricts, how far they mean to comply with the conditions under which they were induced to accede to the terms of the former Bill; and in any case where a non-performance is objected to them, they shelter themselves under the honourable fubterfuge, that the act only provides, that they shall be at libert, to do certain things, but does not absolutely bind them to it.—No doubt, as the act was abloutely bind them to it.—No doubt, as the act was of their own framing, they stight express the clauses as they pleased; but if, in their conferences with the Districts, they held out any particular improvement as a motive for their acceding to the proposed terms, is it fair, is it honourable, is it worthy of the representatives of a large community, to take advantage of the manner in which the clauses of the bill have been expressed. bill have been expressed, in order to evade performance of what was agreed upon? It will readily occut to the reatler, that this part of the conduct of our present Magistrates is of a piece with that of their predecessors, towards the seners of the New Town, who pretended they were not bound to adhere to a plan held out and exposed by them in their Council House, referred to in their advertisements, and on the faith of which the feuers built fine hous fes, because that plan was not expressly referred to, and stipulated for in the feu-contracts. Similar to these may be expected to be the conduct of the rulers of Edinburgh, to long as they are chosen in the present partial manner, and are not accountable to the public for their conduct.

It will not escape the observation of the public, that the Town Council hold out, at different times, different states of matters, just as it may suit their own views for the time. When the act for the South Bridge was in agitation, it was held forth that 10 per cent. on the valuation of Edinburgh and of the South Districts, Leith, and Canongate, fo one year, would be necessary to defray the expense of a South Bridge; otherwise, under what pretence could fuch a tax have been introduced into the act In the bill now before Parliament, it is held out, in In the bill now before Parliament, it is held out, in express terms, that a very small part of that sum, if any at all, will be wanted for the South Bridge; and therefore the Magistrates propose to apply it to another purpose. But the same gentlemen, the Town Council, in the answer published by the Committee, say, that in all probability no portion, or a very small one, of the 10 per cent, will remain after the South Bridge is sinished. It is wonderful, that any set of men are not assumed to avow to the world such manifest contradictions. fuch manifest contradictions

I am, however, inclined to believe, that the lat-ter of these affertions is the most likely to turn out agreeable to troth. The expensive way and manner in which all the public works executed by the City. are gone about, generally confumes every farthing of money that can possibly be raised for the purpose.—
The Town Council have little inclination, and no interest, to pursue economical measures; but many motives lead to the contrary. This Member of Council, or of the Corporations, must be enriched by a beneficial job; the friends or relations of another wanted to be accommodated with fome lucrative employment. But economy can prove benefi-

If these causes should prove insufficient to squander away all the money granted, the precipitate and blundering conduct of those under whose direction the work is placed, will amply compensate for any such desiciency. The North Bridge, by improper management, behoved to fall; and, by its fall, to coll the community many thousand pounds more than would at first have been necessary to construct it with fufficient strength. An instrention to the plan also made it not to be sufficiently raised in the middle. The South Bridge does not appear to go on on a more economical or a more perfect plan.

Without confidering the difference of height be-tween the High-fireet and Nicolfot's-fireet, the High-ftreet is, without farther deliberation, fet about to be lowered; and that, too, with fuch pre cipitation, that it was not fo much as confidered whether the Magistrates had powers to do it or not ! and the expence never was taken into view. this means, after expending a very large fum of the public money, the new Bridge will turn out by far too low, and the aftent from it to Nicolfon's ftreet will be freep; although the only purpose of a bridge is to prevent steep ascents and descents.

The persons employed in building this Bridge would seem not only unable to take a level, but incapable to draw a streight line; for the Bridge is placed out of its proper direction, and must either be bent, or it will run against a corner of the Tron Charch. It is also too narrow; and, to widen in sufficiently, a small bridge must be built at the side of the one already built. To remedy all these defor the one already built. To remedy all these de-fects, an architect must be brought down from Lon-don. How much more easy and less expensive would it have been to have followed his plan and advice from the beginning? Such being the attention and care of our Magi-ferates, have not the inhabitants, and their neighbours of the South Districts, every encouragement to trust them with the management and care of their purfes, and to hope that the trust will not be abued? __ I am, &c.

Scots. The greatest part of the lands is crecked into one entire free barrony, called the Bergary of Skibe. And there is payable out greater part of the lands is erected into one entire free barrony, called the Barrony of Skibo. And there is payable out of the lands holden of the Crown feu-duty to the amount of 47 l. 19 s. 8 d. But as the proprietor has liberty to retain these feu-duties for repairing and proferving the Castle of Skibo, there is no deduction made upon that account. The remainder of the estate, also the Ferry of Portmaculture, or Meikle Ferry, is held of the Earl of Sutherland, for payment of too merk Scots of feu-duty yearly. The lands in general lie in a warm convenient fituation to the north of and contiguous to the Frith of Tain or Dornock, and are very improveable at a fmall expence. There is plenty of free-ftone quarries in the lands, fit for building and making fen-ces; and an inexhaultible quantity of fea-shells fit for manure, upon the shores adjacent to part of the lands.

There is a great deal of natural growing wood, confifting of birch, oak, and alder, which, for most part, would turn to good account, if inclosed and preferved. There are also a good deal of planted wood, confisting of Scots pines or firs, as a good, the configuration of the configuration of the configuration.

There is a good falmon-fishing adjacent to part of the lands, and a small river runs into a bay from the frith. nears, and a small river runs into a bay from the frith, near the manfion-house, in which there is plenty of sea and river trout; also falmon and sounders in the usual seasons. The estate abounds with almost all kinds of game.

The gardens and manus, or farm of shift,

The gardens and mains, or farm of Skibo, formerly occu-ied by the Bishops of Caithness and Sutherland, and where pied by the Bilhops of Caithness and Sutherland, and where they had their country seats, consisting of 319 acres 1 root and 1 fall, exclusive of the belts of planting and other wood plantations, are mostly of a very rich deep soil. The gardens are of remarkable good lands, lie in a very warm fituation hanging to the south, and are well stored with fruit trees of the best kinds. The farm is all inclosed, and mostly subdivided in small inclosures, surrounded with belts of planting, bedges, and hedgestows. hedges, and hedge-rows.

There is a convenient mansion-house on the estate, a large pigeon house, and proper office-houses. It lies about three miles from the town of Dornock, is pleasantly situated on a gentle afcent from the Frith of Dornoch, and commands a most agreeable prospect of that frith and country adjacent; and there is a bay or outlet from the frith, which contributes much to the pleasure of the situation and prospect.

The lituation of the lands of Langwell is remarkably beautiful, romantic, and convenient. They extend above feven miles along the fea-coaft from the Ord of Caithness westward, and reach many miles from the sea up the country, along the banks of the waters of Langwell and Berrydale, which run through straths of the same names, and fall in together at Berrydale, not many hundred yards from the sea. The straths are equally beautiful and commodious, having hills on all sides covered with wood, and the vallies affording arable and natural hay, and good grafs for milk cows. Beyond these there is a very extensive tract of muirish and hill grounds, which yield excellent pasture for yeld cattle, and which, though wide, are diffinctly bounde. No cleate can be better adapted for black cattle and she as well on account of the shelter which the hills and woo afford, as the extent and quality of the paffure. The cattle feed on these grounds in all scasons of the year, without be-ing hurt by the weather; whence they become so hardy, that no cattle from the Highlands of Scotland are more acceptable to drovers than those from this estate.

The mansion-house of Langwell is particularly well situated, at half a mile's distance from the sea, upon the declivity of a hill fronting the fouth, and almost surrounded by a bank ever green with wood. Nor is its situation more pleasing to the eye than it is commodious for living. From one hand there is a constant supply of almost all kinds of sish; and, on every quarter, the greatest plenty and variety of and, on every quarter, the greatest plenty and variety of game, such as deer, roe, black cock, and all kinds of heath fowls.

There is a falmon-fifthing on the water of Berrydale, which may be managed to as to yield a very confiderable yearly revenue, being capable of improvement.

yearly revenue, being capable of improvement.

The woods prefently upon the ground are mostly all of natural growth; but there is great room for planting, and stones in abundance for inclosing; and a little attention to the woods already upon the lands would make them of confiderable benefit to the proprietor, as they are fituated in a country where timber is very scarce.
